Fans across Canada can now follow every CONCACAF Nations League fixture without leaving their living room, thanks to a mix of national broadcasters and reputable streaming services that deliver the action live, on-demand, and on-the-go. The CONCACAF Nations League, launched in 2019, groups the 41 member nations into three tiers based on performance. Each tier plays a round-robin schedule, with promotion-relegation battles and knockout finals that double as World Cup qualifiers for many Caribbean and Central American teams. The tournament fills the calendar between Gold Cup editions, giving smaller nations consistent competitive matches and giving fans a steady stream of international soccer. In Canada, the official broadcast partner for the tournament is TSN, which carries live matches on its main channel and on the TSN Direct streaming platform. For French-speaking audiences, RDS mirrors the English feed, offering commentary in French. Both networks embed the games within their digital ecosystems, meaning
