A mid-semester lecturer discovers that a departmental seminar has been booked in the same lecture hall at the same hour. The clash forces the professor to either relocate the class or cancel the seminar, both of which disrupt learners'™ plans. This situation arises when the CMS does not enforce a single source of truth for room reservations. Immediate action: Pull the shared calendar view, verify the conflict, and reassign one event to an available slot. Long-term fix: Enable the CMS to block double-bookings automatically and require approval for any overrides. Even the most robust CMS can produce overlaps if essential parameters are left at defaults. The following settings should be reviewed each semester: Time-zone consistency: Ensure all campus entities operate under the same zone setting to
