system's "custom view" feature to overlay multiple terms on a single timeline. By assigning distinct colors to registration periods, exam windows, and holiday breaks, users can instantly spot collisions and re-allocate tasks before they become urgent. Many hobbyist scholars treat the calendar as a university-only tool, neglecting how personal projects—such as a weekend woodworking class or a community garden shift—must also fit within the academic rhythm. The oversight often leads to burnout when extracurricular commitments clash with midterms. Maintaining separate planners for school and hobbies, which creates duplicated effort and blind spots.
