Douglas County Libraries are expanding their digital shelf, giving students across the county immediate, no-cost access to e-books, research databases, tutoring platforms, and test prep tools. The initiative removes typical barriers—paywalls, travel time, and limited library hours—so learners can study whenever and wherever they need. Traditional library visits still matter, but the modern student's schedule often clashes with fixed hours. By moving key materials online, the library system aligns itself with today's on-the-go learning culture. The result is a more equitable landscape: high school seniors prepping for college entrance exams, community college students tackling coursework, and lifelong learners can all tap the same pool of vetted content without a subscription fee.
