and provide a visual cue that each letter is a distinct, fun shape. Start by sketching a light pencil outline. For a child-friendly L, the vertical stem should be approximately twice the height of the horizontal base. Keep the line width uniform to create a solid foundation for the bubble effect. When working with a beginner, use a ruler or a printed stencil to establish consistent proportions. Once the framework is in place, draw a circle around the lower corner where the stem and base meet. This circle serves as the anchor for the rounded part of the bubble. The rest of the stem should remain a straight line, but add a subtle bulge on the top side to give the impression of depth. Children can practice this by drawing the letter on a grid paper, which helps maintain proportional spacing. Uneven Stem Width: Use a consistent pressure with a medium-weight pen or marker. Missing the Corner Bubble: Place a small dot before drawing the circle to secure the connection.
