UJSportal has emerged as a central hub for filing and tracking U.S. court documents, while the new Master PACOURTS US Filing system promises to streamline multi-court submissions. For everyday users who need reliable access to case information, understanding how these tools work together—and where the limitations lie—can make the difference between a smooth filing experience and endless frustration. UJSportal was built to aggregate public docket data from federal, state, and local courts into a single searchable interface. The platform targets lawyers, journalists, and self-representing litigants who require quick access to filings, docket numbers, and court decisions. By centralising disparate sources, the portal reduces the time spent hopping between individual court websites, which often have varying layouts and access rules. Unified Access — UJSportal’s searchable database removes the need for multiple logins, delivering a single point of entry for docket research. Time Savings — Master PACOURTS US Filing eliminates repetitive uploads, allowing a single submission to satisfy several courts’ requirements. Error Reduction — Automated routing reduces the chance of filing a document with the wrong court or using an outdated form. If your asylum case has been referred to immigration court, you are not headed back to a different version of the same office. On Trump's
